

The Ebb and Flow of Everyday Contacts:

Forging Literary Communities in Early Modern Panjab

by Purnima Dhavan

*Associate Professor
Department of History
University of Washington*

Texts in Punjabi have for much of its history been written in multiple scripts and engaged deeply with myriad textual, aural, and oral communities. The words and letters of literary agents in 17th century Punjab, this lecture argues, actively shaped communities and networks, pointing to the boundaries some wished to enforce, and the boundaries that others transgressed..
